CHARACTERIE
AN ARTE
of shorte, swifte, and secrete writing by Character.

Invented by Timothe Bright, Doctor of Phisike.

Imprinted at London by
I. Windet, the assigne of Tim. Bright.

1588.

Cum Privilegio Regiæ Maiestatis.
Forbidding all other to print the same.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The celebration last year of the Tercentenary of Dr. Bright's work on Characterie, the first English Shorthand, has given such an impetus to the study of stenographic history and development, and excited so great an interest in the birth of Modern Shorthand, that I need offer no excuse for reprinting so rare a book, only one copy of which is known to be in existence.

In every detail I have followed the original, preserving the exact spacing and pagination, as well as the quaint old-style spelling, using also an almost identical fount of letters specially obtained for the purpose, but substituting engraved characters for the rapidly fading pen and ink stenograms in the original, that my fellow laborers in shorthand research may have the same facility of examining the work, as would be afforded by visiting and procuring admission as readers of the Bodleian Library at Oxford.

An Instruction to the Reader, how the art is to be learned.

Thou hast here gentle reader, an art of short, and so of speedie wryting, plainly delivered vnto thee. So as by thine own industry, thou maiest attain unto it, if thou wilt but one month take paines therein, and by continuance of an other month, maiest thou attain to great readines. For thy better instruction, thou art first to learne the characterie words by heart, and therewith the making of the figure to the character, to doo it readily, and cleane, then, to be able to joyne euery character to the word word pronounced, without book or sight of any pattern before thee. This done, thou art farther to proceed, and to learn how to refer eyther words of like signification, or of the same kinde, or contraries into those that be quite characterie. Here because e-very man by his own reach can not consider how to refer all words, thou hast in this book an English dictionary, with words of referēce already thereto adioyned to help such as of thēselues can not so dispose thē. The words which are called appellatiue, if they signifie things that have distinct parts: those parts are to be written on the one side, and the things and all the sortes of that

To the Reader

To the Reader

that kind, on the other, and where there be many of a kind for cleerer distinction, part thē into diuers sides. Likewise, as thou maiest see in the table of thē more particularly. Instead of much laborious writing; for thy speedie exercise, and ease, thou maiest cause one to read the dictionarie to thee, while thou writest it, and so in that small quantity of paper hast thou to exercise thee more, thē if thou shouldest write whole volumes. And if thou wilt take pains to cast the characterie words into some discourse, as liketh thee best, so hast thou a means of reteyning the art, and keeping it without al danger of forgetting.

Moreover.

To the Reader

Moreover, thou maiest exercise this art after a while learning, as well by reading without writing as if thou diddest write, by calling the character to thy minde, and the worde of reference. So hast thou the art of short, swifte, and secrete writing, none comparable.

Farewell.

THE ARTE OF Characterie.

Haracterie is an art of writing brieflie.

It hath two parts.
The first parte is concerning the making of the characters.

The second is concerning the value, and signification of them.

The character is a brief
mark of a word.

To characters doe belong two thinges: figure, and Ioy-ning.

The figure ought to be ea-sie, and brief.

The ioyning of characters consisteth of situation, and distinction

The

The Arte of

The situation of character ought to be one directly under the other.

The distinction ought to be made with a prick sette under the character, at every breathing, or pause of the sentence as !

These are properties belonging to all characters. The kinds of characters are two: simple or compound.

The simple one is a character made of no other, and is varied by every kinde of position, hanging or lying.

It is either a straight line, or crooked.

A straight line hanging direct, as, | or bias as / \ lying, thus, —

Characterie

A crooked line, is either half circle or whole, hanging thus, \cap \cup lying thus \frown \smile The whole circle thus \circ

The compounded characters are such as be made of the simple.

The compound character hath two parts: the one is the body of the character, and the other is an addition to it.

The body of the character is a single straight character, & by it is varied the position of the character compounded thereof.

The addition is to either side of the body, to the head or to the foot.

The addition is either single, or compound.

Single, when the addition is

The Arte of

is of one line only: and that eyther streight, or crooked.

Streight line to the head of either side, thus: 7 7 7 7 7 to the foote, thus: 7 7 7 7 7

A crooked line to the head, thus; 7 7 7 7 7 to the foot, thus: 7 7 7 7 7

A compound addition is when the addition consisteth of two lines.

The compound addition is of two sorts: either of the same kind of lines, as two crooked as 7, or one streight and the other crooked, at the head thus 7 7, at the foot thus 7 7

Hetherto of the parts of straight line characters, and the properties belonging to them.

NOW OF THE KINDS.

A straight line cōpound is

Characterie

is multiplied by varying position, first — then / and

A straight line character is either simple compounded, or double compound.

Simply comp at head thus: from c * answering the alphabet saving k, q, and y, which are answered with c, and i,

Position \sim / \backslash at the feet thus: $\text{JL JL JL JL JL JL JL}$ position \sim / \backslash

Double compounds are such, as have additions both at head and foot, as Jf Jf Jf Jf Jf Jf &c, and so the rest, the 12. feet added. Position thus $\sim \backslash \text{J}$

These are all the straight lined characters.

Thus much concerning the character, and of the first part of charactery.

The Arte of

The second part of Characterie, touching the signification of the Character

THe signification of the character is of two sorts, solitary or accompanied.

The solitary signification is that, which a solitary character exprefseth.

That is, certain words whereto all other may bee referred, called charactericall.

The charactericall words, are a number that have neither agreement, nor contrariety together: but stand indifferently affected.

These are all contained in the table following, with the Cha

Chara terie

character adioyned to each word.

Let a short crook, serve an usual and short word: and a long one a long word: except the order in the alphabet disposed for memory, cause alteration.

A word of the same sound, though of diuerse sense, is written with the same: as, fast, for abstinence from meat, for swiftness, and sureness: so if it much differ not, as whore, and hore, whole, and hole.

Of the properties belonging to words.

THE properties belonging to words, are shewed by plain expressing them: or are gathered by nature of the speech. They

The Arte of

They are expressed by pricks on to the side of the character.

They are common to all words, or peculiar unto certain.

The common is, to be primitive, or derived.

Of primitives, or deriuatiues.

Primitives and deriuatiues are known by the language: as, he is a virtuous man, not a virtue man: fear God, honor the king: not fearful, so not honourable.

Deriuatiue words that end in er, require two prickles at the right side of the character: as, labourer is deriued of labour. }.

Such as end in ship, as friend

Characterie

friendship, or hood, as neighbourhood, require in the word written, the character of ship to be placed underneath: and whether it, or hood be to be read, the language will plainly deliver. For no man will read either neighbourhood, or friendship.

Such be written with the character of h, and a prick on the left side, as: h

Thus much of primatiues and deriuatiues: which are common to all words.

Now of peculiar properties.

THe peculiar to nownes are number and comparifon
Of number.

A; going before the word, declareth the fingular number: as, a man, not, a men.

B.

When

The Arte of

Whē the, goeth before, place a prick at the side of the character following, to note its plural number, as ȝ the ages.

The character of this requirith a prick on the side, to signify thus. ʒ

The rest is declared by the language: as, two men, not two man.

Of comparifon.

The comparative degree is known from the other, by than, following: as, Gold is better than silver, not good than silver, nor best.

The superlative degree is declared by of, following: as, Gold is best of mettalls.

When comparifon is betwixt two, of, signifieth the comparative degree: as, better of twain. Hetherto

Characterie

Hetherto of properties belonging to nownes: it followeth of such as belong to verbs, as tence, or time.

Of Tence.

If the time be parted frō the word, as, I will against such a day, do this: then make the mark of the time at the side of the person: as, .! .j

The time of doing anything if it be past, and is signified by haue: let the character for haue, be written.

If had, doe signify it, make a prick in the character of haue, on the left hand. ʒ

If did, make the like prick in the character of do, on the same side. ʒ

For where, write the character true of where.

If the word by reason of

The Arte of

tence end in ed, as, I lived, then make a prick in the character of the word, on the left side.

The time to come requireth a prick on the right side.

When would is to be expressed, write the character of well for it, and read it would: and for should, make a prick on the right side of well.

The present tence wanteth a prick, and so is knowen from other tences.

A word of doing, that endeth in ing, as, eating, drinking, &c, requireth two pricks direct under the body of the character, as

Other times or tences, depending upon these, and are plainly discerned by the nature of the language.

Characterie

A note of Numbers, & proper names.

Numbers are written by the heads of the compound characters, with a streight bodie hanging, and take increase by place, as cyphers in arithmetike.

Proper names, if they be significant, are written by character: as field, day, &c. otherwise the head of the character bearing the figure of a letter added also to the foot, and so joyned in one figure, may serve for two letters: as ab \ ac / ad \ ae \ ba \ be \ &c and so other two, till all the word, or as much as necessary, shall be written: with a mark at the side of the first character, to show that it is a name.

The Arte of

Hetherto concerning the solitary signification, with properties belonging to words It fol loweth of the accompa nied signification.

The accompanied signification is that which the character expressed by an addition to it.

This addition, is the heads of streight characters, each answering a letter in the alphabet.

These additions carry the first letter of the accompanied signification, to declare what it is.

If the accompanied signification have two words of like beginning as ledde, and latine, take two of the first letters made into one character, as before any names, for differēce. If

Characterie

If two, be like, (which is very rare) leaue the vowel, or the consonant, of the one, for difference, as in stretch and strain, and take that which may make the difference.

The accompanied signification is of two kindes.

Either when the very word is signified or the sense only.

The very word, when the precise word is to be signified.

Here sometimes falleth out a shortening of writing.

First, when and, or, any, or such cōiunctions come betwixt two words that are of like significatiō, or contraries: then: instead of the character of the second, place the addition inserting the first letter of that word, to the side of the coniunction as ^hlife and death.

And

The Arte of

And if many fynominaes, or contraries be uttered not coupled by any coniunction, make a pricke instead of the cōniunction, and note those fynominaes, or contraries, with their marks, as before is said, as part whole; lumpe, peece, thus: ३! १ The second shortening is in repititions.

If the repitition be of single wordes, the figure of the number how oft it is repeated is to be added to the left side of the character of the repeated word, or so many pricks, as earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. १ १ १

If it be of a sentēce, or whole part thereof, place a circle on the right side of the first repeated woordes character.

Characterie

Thus: In perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils of the sea, write thus, နိရိစ္ဆိဒ္ဓံ နိရိစ္ဆိဒ္ဓံ.

The accompanied signification in exprefs word, is of two forts. Either of like, and consenting significatiō with the solitary : or of dissenting.

The consenting significatiō requireth the mark on the left side.

The consenting significatiō is of two kinds.

When the accompanied signification is a syonima to the solitary, or a kind of it.

Synonima, as anger, rage, fury, — १ — ७ —

A kind as mettall, brafse, tinne, ledde. འཇམ་མཁའ་མཁའ་མཁའ་མཁའ་མཁའ་

Thus

The Arte of

Thus much of the consenting signification: the followeth of the dissenting.

The dissenting signification is when the accompanied dissenteth from the solitary.

Here the addition is to be placed on the right side, as:

When it is a mere denying it hath only a dash through the character, whose word it denieth, as, is, is not: good, not good. — + ‡ §

Here place the shortening on the right side, as life, and death, neither good nor badde. ¶

When such a contrarie is first to be written, as is not conteyned in the title of characterly wordes, then write it with the addition, and let the conjunction

Characterie

iunction be accōpanied with the mark on the left side, as death and life. $\frac{2}{1}$

Which mark is a pricke if it be the solitary significatiō that is to be written, otherwise a mark of the synonima, thereof

Hetherto cōserning the accompanied signification of the exprefs words it followeth of the sense.

The sense only is to be taken with the character, whē besides that we desire to be swift, the very exprefs worde is not necessary. That is, when they do but fill the speach, or otherwise are not of the substance matter: as, circumlocutions, and purposes.

Of the first sort is, when we leue out the special, and peculiar properties: as, high heauen, eternal God. Here leaue out
